Description	On May 25, 2019, the NSS Committee initiated an essential Social Awareness campaign titled "Menstrual Hygiene," aiming to break the silence surrounding menstruation and promote open discussions about menstrual health. Recognizing the cultural stigmas and taboos associated with menstruation, the campaign sought to create a safe and inclusive space for dialogue. The NSS Committee organized informative sessions, workshops, and interactive discussions to dispel myths, educate participants about menstrual hygiene, and address the challenges faced by individuals during their periods. Collaborating with healthcare professionals, the event provided accurate information about the biological aspects of menstruation and emphasized the importance of destigmatizing this natural bodily function. Furthermore, the campaign distributed menstrual hygiene kits to promote proper sanitation practices, especially in marginalized communities. "Period Talks" was a step towards normalizing conversations about menstruation, empowering individuals to embrace their reproductive health with dignity. Through this initiative, the NSS Committee contributed to fostering a more understanding and supportive community, breaking down barriers and challenging the societal norms that perpetuate menstrual taboos.
